PENERANGAN / INFORMATION :

1 Introduction To Communication

1.1 Have you ever felt the messages you convey are not communicated properly or have you ever felt guilty of not conveying the message as it wants to be conveyed? If so it is because of your weakness towards communication skills. Apart from the basic necessities, you need to be equipped with habits for good communication skills, as this is what will make you a happy and successful social being. In order to develop these habits, you need to first acknowledge the fact that communication skills need an improvement from time to time. The only constant in life is change, and the more you accept your strengths and work towards dealing with shortcomings, especially in the area of communication skills, the better will be your interactions and the more your social popularity. Thus the present unit enables you to get a detailed picture of the need and importance of developing communication skills and feel confident and empowering to face any type of situation in life.

1.2 We use 'communication' usually to speak, write or sending a message to another person. It involves a number of choices and decisions but being natural and unnoticed in informal situations. In formal situations, our communication needs to be more effective and carefully chosen, that is, we need to plan our communication.

1.3 Communication may be broadly defined as the process of interaction among human beings. It is the process by which meanings are perceived and understandings are reached among human beings. It involve the cooperation between two parties, one active or at the giving end and the other passive or at the receiving end.

1.4 The sender selects appropriate symbols to suit the situation and realizes the meaning through speech or writing depending upon the socially regulated requirements or self-perceived needs. At the receiving end the symbols are identified and identification obviously implies recognition and realization of meaning through the interpretive process.

1.5 The process of Communication may be summarized as shown on Figure 1.

1.6 Communication is a network of interactions and naturally the sender and the receiver keep on changing their roles.

1.7 Communication takes place by exchanging symbols to describe our ideas and experience. Language is a common symbol system which is used for sharing our experiences with others. We can also use other symbols like pictures, colors, signs and sounds to communicate. We do communicate a number of things by our facial expressions, movements, clothing and so on, though we do not speak. Thus communications through words are called Verbal Communication; communications through symbols are called non-verbal communication.

2. Basic Communication Method

2.1 Different method of communications are used depend on the situations. Certain form of communication can be useful and appropriate for certain use but it will not be consider ethical. For example: When a staff want to report to his boss, he will have to write a proper grammar using professional language and realistic data. It is not professional if he posted a note on his boss' facebook and since facebook is a social network place that is not very suitable for work discussion.

2.2 Nowadays, we are exposed to many form of communications. All of these form of communication can be classified into 2 different categories:-

- i. Verbal communication
- ii. Non-verbal communication

2.3 Verbal communication

i. Verbal communication is the process of conveying information that involved communicating verbally using language that the sender and the receiver are able to understand each other effectively.

ii. There are two types of verbal communication:

a. Oral communication

Oral communication is the process of verbally transmitting information and ideas from one individual or group to another by word of mouth.

b. Written communication.

Writing is used when we have to provide detailed information such as figures and facts. It is also generally used to send documents and other important material such contracts, memos and minutes of meetings as to stakeholders which could then be stored for later use as it can be referred to easily as it is recorded. The media of written communication are:

- Letter.
- Circulars.
- Memos.
- Notices.
- Reports
- Minutes

iii. It can be seen in recent years that verbal communication has been replaced to a great extent by a faster form such as video conferencing and email.

2.4 Non-verbal communication

i. Non verbal communication is the process of conveying information in the form of non-word messages. These include:

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

- Body Movements (Kinesics)
- Posture
- Eye Contact
- Para-language
- Closeness or Personal Space (Proxemics)
- Facial Expressions
- Physiological Changes

ii. Although the most common methods of communication are carried out orally or in writing, when it comes to management techniques, the power of non-verbal communication must never be underestimated. Smile, gestures and several body movements send out a message to the people around you.

3. Definition Of Oral Communication

3.1 Oral communication is the process of verbally transmitting information and ideas from one individual or group to another by word of mouth.

3.2 The media of oral communication are:-

- a. Face to face conversations.
- b. Telephone talk.
- c. Interviews.
- d. Presentations.
- e. Discussions.
- f. Meetings.
- g. Lectures.
- h. Speech.
- i. Video phones.
- j. Video conferences (combination of audio and video)
- k. Podcasts (audio clips that can be access on the Internet)
- l. Voiceover Internet Protocol (VoIP) which allows callers to communicate over
- m. the Internet and avoid telephone charges. Skype is an example of VoIP.

3.3 Oral communication is a direct conversation, more natural and immediately available for responding to a comment / statement. In natural and informal situations, we speak readily without hesitation in order to communicate with others but in a formal and official situation, many persons feel nervous and cannot speak easily. It needs training, practice and skill to speak effectively in a formal situation. Oral communication requires the presence and simultaneous attention of both the persons. Need for personal presence makes certain demands on the skills of both; each must be able to respond to the body language of the other, and must be able to make immediate response to what the other says.

4. Advantages and Disadvantages of Oral Communication

4.1 Advantages of Oral Communication

- i. There is high level of understanding and transparency in oral communication as it is interpersonal.

4.2: Disadvantages/Limitations of Oral Communication

- i. Relying only on oral communication may not be sufficient as business communication is formal and very organized.
- ii. Oral communication is less authentic than written communication as they are informal and not as organized as written communication.
- iii. Oral communication is time-saving as far as daily interactions are concerned, but in case of meetings, long speeches consume lot of time and are unproductive at times.
- iv. Oral communications are not easy to maintain and thus they are unsteady.
- v. There may be misunderstandings as the information is not complete and may lack essentials.
- vi. It requires attentiveness and great receptivity on part of the receivers or audience.
- vii. Oral communication (such as speeches) is not frequently used as legal records except in investigation work

5. Types of oral communication

5.1 There are seven (7) forms that oral communication often takes:

- i. Intrapersonal communication is self-talk or a conversation you hold with yourself under certain circumstances. For example, when you need to make an important decision or learn something about yourself. It is a form of thinking that goes on inside us which relies on language to express itself. Often increases self-awareness and mindfulness, and hones critical thinking skills.
- ii. Interpersonal communication is communication between several people. This form of communication may range from the impersonal to the very personal. Impersonal communication is when you talk with a person you do not really care about. The most personal type of communication occurs when you talk with people who are close to you such as best friend, family members and colleagues. Interpersonal communication can take place face to face as well as through electronic channels like video-conferencing, chat rooms, e-mail and twitter.

iii. Small group communication takes place in a group, usually comprising five to 10 people This form of communication serves relationship needs (like companionship, family bonding and affection or support) as well as task-based needs, for example, deciding on disciplinary action or resolving conflict. You learn to exchange ideas, solve problems and share experiences. At the workplace, small groups may meet to discuss issues related to work, or for problem-solving or team-building purposes. Learning to communicate effectively in teams contributes to success and advancement in many careers.

iv. Public communication is also known as public speaking, involves communication between a speaker and an audience. This audience may range from just a few people to thousands or even millions of people. The aim of the speaker is usually to inform or to persuade the audience to act, buy, or think in a certain way. A teacher may address an assembly of students on codes of behaviour or school rules. A politician may make speeches on how he will be dealing with certain issues in order to win their votes. An executive may give a business presentation to get more sales. It is important to understand some of the basic principles of effective public speaking so that you are able to influence, persuade as well as entertain your audience when you communicate with them.

v. Mass communication is communication that is sent out from a source to many receivers all over the world. It takes place through media like films, radio, videos and television. Modern avenues of mass communication like the Internet and blogs can be very powerful indeed as information is disseminated instantly.

vi. Corporate communication is communication that takes place among members of an organization, within that organization. Interacting in teams, conferencing with co-workers, talking with a supervisor or manager, giving employees explanations and directions, interviewing and making presentations are some examples of corporate communication. Effective corporate communication skills enhance corporate image and impact positively on morale, commitment, and productivity in corporations.

vii. Intercultural communication is communication between people of diverse cultures and ethnicity. The world is increasingly becoming a global village and every country has people of various ethnicities. Thus, it is important to note differences in the communication practices of different cultures if intercultural harmony and understanding is to be maintained.

For example, in many Asian countries, students will seldom contradict or disagree with a teacher in the classroom as this shows disrespect. In Western, it is the norm for students to think for themselves and engage their teachers in debate and discussion. It is important to make efforts to recognize and respect the communication practices of people from different cultures and nationalities.

6. Sign language and gestures

6.1 A sign language and gesture can give clues and additional information and meaning over verbal communication. Its allow:-

- i. Reinforce or modify what is said in words. For example, people may nod their heads when saying "Yes" to emphasise that they agree with the other person.
- ii. Convey information about their emotional state.
- iii. Define or reinforce the relationship between people.
- iv. Provide feedback to the other person.
- v. Regulate the flow of communication, for example by signaling to others that they have finished speaking or wish to say something.

6.2 A smile, a gestures and several body movements send out a message to the people around you.

6.3 Interpreting sign language and gesture is not that simple. The way communication is influenced by the context in which it occurs. For example, a nod of the head between colleagues in a committee meeting may mean something very different to when the same action is used to acknowledge someone across a crowded room. Further complicated in that it is usually not possible to interpret a gesture or expression accurately on its own.

7. Ideas and information delivery.

7.1: There are some tips that will allow you to express your ideas clearly.

i. Language easily understood

Remember that the language you use everyday may be confusing to others.

Simplify anything you can in order to find a comfort level for your listener

ii. Illustrations.

Research has proven that over 60% of those listening to us are visual learners. An illustration may engage your audience, and help stimulate learning.

iii. Organize Thoughts

This will allow those listening to you to remain on the same level because people enjoy order and clarity.

iv. Narrow subject to key points

Discuss what you feel is most important, don't overload your listener with

---------------------------	--------------------------------	--

unnecessary information.

v. Summarize

You will further clarify your point, and your listeners will have another chance to retain the information you have provided them.

8. Cultural awareness

8.1 Cultural sensitivity begins with the understanding that there are differences among cultures. Knowing that cultural differences as well as similarities exist, without assigning values (i.e. better or worse, right or wrong) to those cultural differences.

8.2 Developing sensitivity and understanding of another ethnic group usually involves internal changes in attitudes and values. Awareness and sensitivity also refer to the qualities of openness and flexibility that people develop in relation to others.

8.3 Familiarization with selected cultural characteristics, history, values, belief systems, and behaviours of the members of another ethnic group. We can never learn everything about another culture but we can take to develop our cultural awareness.

Here are some suggestions:

- i. Develop awareness. Take a look at your own biases and prejudices, become aware of cultural norms, attitudes, and beliefs, and value diversity;
- ii. Don't allow cultural differences (preferences) to become the basis for criticism and judgements.
- iii. Build friendships of mutual respect and a desire for understanding.
- iv. Be yourself and show that you care about the person and that you honestly want to help.
- v. Take time to listen. If you don't understand, or you are not being understood, take time to find out why or ask questions.
- vi. Acquire knowledge about other cultures by attending classes or seminars, reading books or watching movies about other cultures, and attending cultural events / festivals.

8.4 Developing a culturally competent attitude is an ongoing process. It is important to view all people as unique individuals and realize that their experiences, beliefs, values and language affect their ways of interacting with others and the larger community. Be aware that differences also exist within cultures. It is wrong to assume that a common culture is shared by all members of a racial, linguistic or religious group.
