PENERANGAN/INFORMATION :

What is employee discipline?

According to the business dictionary, employee discipline is defined as the regulations or conditions that are imposed on employees by management in order to either correct or prevent behaviors that are detrimental to an organization.

The purpose of employee discipline is not to embarrass or degrade an employee. The purpose is to ensure that an employee performs in a manner that is deemed acceptable by the organization.

Over the years, the concept of employee discipline has grown. Management realized that discipline is a part of the job. They also realize that there must be disciplinary action within an organization to maintain some sense of control.

In today's workplace, discipline and documentation go hand in hand. Most disciplinary action policies are progressive. This means that rule violations increase, so do the consequences. To protect the organization, adequate documentation of the rule violation and consequences must exist.

Human resources experts advise that workplace discipline is best administered in a private, one-on-one conference that focuses on behavior not personalities. It is important not to ignore the issue related to discipline as it may disturb organization's progress.

The employee has to know what is expected from them at the time they are performing their task, what they receive upon successfully completing that task and what they will receive if the path to the task is deviated. Once this has been established, the means of discipline employee can be successful.

1. Discipline guideline

1.1 Discipline is training to act in accordance with rules. It is a behavior in accord with rules of conduct and order maintained by training and control.

1.2 Self-discipline can be considered a type of selective training, creating new habits of thought, action and speech toward improving employee and reaching goals.

1.3 These guidelines are intended to review the most effective approach in managing performance and/or discipline issues.

1.4 Discipline issues generally result in disruption to the work environment; for example workplace misconduct and/or rules violations as well as performance issues, result in a failure to meet goals and/or properly perform tasks such as when an individual lacks the knowledge, skills or ability to perform the job, or where the work is consistently unacceptable in terms of quality of productivity.

1.5 It is employer responsibility to explain to the employee those areas in which he or she is expected to improve, to make suggestions about how to improve and to allow time for the employee to make improvements.

2. Principle of confidentiality

2.1 In today's increasingly litigious and highly competitive workplace, confidentiality is important for a host of reasons. Failure to properly secure and protect confidential business information can lead to the loss of business or clients.

2.2 Confidentiality is a set of rules or a promise that limits access or places restrictions on certain types of information.

2.3 In the wrong hands, confidential information can be misused to commit illegal activity e.g. fraud or discrimination which can in turn result in costly lawsuit for the employer.

2.4 Company has laws protecting the confidentiality of certain information in workplace. The disclosure of sensitive employee and management information can lead to a loss of employee trust, confidence and loyalty. This will almost always result in a loss of productivity.

2.5 Preservation of confidentiality and privacy is central to treating people with dignity and respect.

3. Standard and codes of practice

3.1 Whether written or communicated informally, a code of conduct defines behavior expectations for both management and other employees.

3.2 Practice is perform or exercise repeatedly or regularly in order to improve or maintain one's proficiency.

3.3 While such codes do not prevent inappropriate behavior or fraud, they do provide employees with legal and ethical standards that will influence their performance and commitment to the entity's system of internal control.

3.4 These documents provide agreed codes of practice describing the standard of conduct and practice within which employee should work.

4. Working guideline

4.1 Many rules are already in place in the form of policies and laws, but some rules and procedures need to be department specific such as :

- i) How your area works together to meet customer expectations.
- ii) Procedures for employees reporting absences
- iii) Procedures for requesting time off for illness, vacation, emergency leave, bereavement leave and jury duty.
- iv) Workweek departmental hours and whether or not flexible work arrangements are permitted.

4.2 It is important that they are in compliance with existing policies and laws, and that they are practical, clear and understandable. They must also be enforceable and applied to all employees.

4.3 Working guidelines can be very helpful by providing continuity and equity in the workplace. Having a document in writing that has been given to employees can help ensure that everyone understands the procedures that are in place for employee area.

5. Social interactions procedures

5.1 A social interaction is an exchange between two or more individuals and is a building block of society.

5.2 This procedure defines the core principles that govern employee behavior and how the company conducts its business, as well as provides tools and resources to help employees to comply.

5.3 Social interaction at the workplace promotes enhanced collaboration, higher metacognition, richer sensory experience by way of emotion, better planning where each member feels included and better understanding of common values and purpose.

5.4 Employer which promote social interaction within organization are able to engage wider range of human intelligence which includes physiological, social, emotional, constructive, reflective and dispositional.

5.5 In this manner, a wider range of human intelligence is integrated in a natural manner to achieve the individual and organization goal.
