PENERANGAN/INFORMATION:

1. Introduction

A workplace is a location at which an employer provides works for employees. The workplace is located in a variety of settings including offices, manufacturing facilities or factories, stores, farms, out-of-doors, and in any location where work is performed.

Home offices, telecommunicating work arrangements, and world-wide employment relationships mean that almost any location, including the employee's home, may serve as and accurately be called, a workplace and provides guidance and regulations for the workplace in such areas as workers compensation, breaks and lunch requirements, leave requirements, equal employment opportunity, and unemployment compensation.

2. How To Demonstrate Responsibility

Responsibility is an admirable trait and leads to further gains. Responsibility is not just doing your homework or feeding your pets; it is making proper choices and doing the right things you were asked for. You cannot show responsibility without having it. "When life gives you lemons..." what will you do? The answer differs from one to another, but showing and having responsibility can and will , pay off.

2.1 Identify your daily routine

Everyone has their own set of tasks to complete every day, from small things like brushing your teeth to the big things like paying overdue taxes. Think of your daily life, and make a list of your responsibilities. Then, put a note next to each item such as "crucial" and "important" for tasks that must be completed, or "minor" for tasks that could be ignored or defer to later date. Something may be important or not based on your personal views, but do not leave events you cannot get away with. Making this list will help you become more organized and help you manage your time wisely and get what needs to be done right away. Hence, your routine.

2.2 Plan

After generating your 'things to do' list, go through all the events marked "important" and think about where they will fit into your schedule. Need to fax some important papers? Bring them to the office if you have a fax machine! Need to take your pet to the Vet? Find a gap in your schedule and fill it in! Determine how long each task will take and what materials you may need to help complete it. Organize a chain of events in the order of importance, and go for it!

--------------------------	--------------------------------	--

2.3 Acceptability

It may not always be easy to complete your goals, or turn past mistakes around. But it could always be worse. If you lose sight, just stop for a minute and thank God aloud (if you believe in Him) for the little things in life we tend to take it for granted. You do have family and friends that love you, and if you need to, call upon them for support! The reality that you might have to accept is that you can't do it all alone. So find someone you trust and ask for help! Anyone who tries to hold you back or bring you down is not helping, just simply ignore them and stick with your goals is the most responsible thing that you could do.

2.4 Use your resources

Do not give up right there and then; be a problem solver! See if you can borrow from someone else, look for something useable, either by renting or substitute with different gadgets. A little bit of crucial judgments may put away your unnecessary stress and lost time.

2.5 Stay focused

Keep your head up and try your best to keep your emotions intact. We've all felt like we're about to burst out from pressure, anger or stress at one point or another, but tackling the situation with grace and patience, rather than pitching a fit, shows you are responsible person. If you are no longer able to exert excessive burdens share it with someone! See if you can do away with some tasks, by either taking them out of your schedule completely or share the burdens. This will help you be more focused and complete the jobs earlier.

2.6 Be truthful

If you've made promises, keep them. Don't make promises you know you may not be able to keep: this is very irresponsible manner. Even if it is not a promise, if you said you'll do something, then just fulfill it. That's just being good friends.

3. Factors That Demonstrate A Strong Work Ethic

3.1 Integrity

Integrity stretches to all aspects of an employee's job. An employee with integrity fosters trusting relationships with clients, peers and supervisors. Coworkers value the employee's ability to come out with honest feedbacks. Clients trust the employee's advice. Supervisors rely on subordinates' high moral standards, trusting them not to pinch the company material goods or create problems.

3.2 Sense of Responsibility

A strong sense of responsibility affects performance of employee at work place and the number of work done. When the employees feel personally responsible for their job performance, they will show up on time, put in their best efforts and complete work tasks to the best of their ability.

3.3 Emphasis on Quality

Some employees perform only to the bare minimum of their capability, just enough to keep their job intact. Employees with strong work ethic care about the quality of their works. They do their best to produce great result in works, not merely churn out what is needed. The employee's commitment to achieve good quality will improve the company's overall value.

3.4 Discipline

It takes a certain level of commitments to finish your tasks every day. An employee with good discipline stays focused on his/her goals and is determined to complete his/her assignments. This employee shows a high level of commitment and dedicated to his/her job and always ensure he/she accomplishes his/her works.

3.5 Sense of Teamwork

Most employees have to work together to meet a company's objectives. An employee with a high sense of teamwork helps the team to meet its goals and deliver quality work. These employees appreciate their team mates' works and be of assistance where and when possible.

4. Benefits Of Punctuality At Work

It is very important to earn and maintain respect at workplace. The followings are some reasons why you should be punctual at work.

4.1 Respect

Punctuality speaks of a person's respect of others. In giving respect to others we can earn it back in return.

4.2 Deadlines

An employee who isn't stressed about reaching late or has come in early enough to give him minutes to settle in before the day's work begins, has a better chance to get more accomplishments than a late comer who will be more under pressure. Some professionals, such as writers, journalists, producers and accountants, have daily, weekly and monthly deadlines. Meeting deadlines and timelines reassure clients that they can count on you to get the job done. Without professional punctuality, customers might look for another alternative to supply their needs. Striving to meet deadlines helps establish your strong work ethic and your desire to be productive.

4.3 Team-Centered Goals

When you are on time for meetings, conference calls and shift changes, you show others that you have team-centered work goals. Punctuality demonstrates your respect to co-workers and clients and hence reinforces your time-management skills. Team-focused employees avoid extended lunch breaks, respond to emails in a timely fashion and avoid tardiness, making sure to carry their weight on the job. If you want your boss and co-workers to see you as a responsible team-centered worker, then be punctual.

4.4 Credibility

It might not seem like your job security is based on punctuality, but it certainly doesn't hurt, especially in a struggling economy. The number of employees arriving late to work at least once a week has slid from 20 percent to 15 percent (Channel 2 news report in Reno Nevada). In a tough job market, you don't want to risk losing your job because your boss sees you as lazy or irresponsible. Punctuality demonstrates your willingness to get up early, plan and make every effort to complete your work on time.

5. Professionalism

Punctuality is a sign of professionalism and helps you stand out as a reliable and trustworthy employee. If you don't get your part of a project completed on time, you keep others from being able to finish theirs. Being punctual helps you establish your reputation as a dependable and consistent worker. In an interdependent working environment, everything runs like a well-oiled piece of machinery. Being on time helps ensure that you're doing your best to keep things running smoothly.

5.1 Tardy

An employee is deemed to be tardy when he/she:

- i) Fails to report for work at the assigned/scheduled work time. In these instances, managers may replace the tardy employee for the full shift.
- ii) Leaves work prior to the end of assigned/scheduled work time without prior supervisory approval.
- iii) Takes an extended meal or break period without approval
- iv) Arrives to work past his/her scheduled start time may be replaced for the full shift at the discretion of his/her supervisor.

5.2 Time Clocks and Failure to Clock in/out

Employees are required to follow established guidelines for recording their actual hours worked. A missed clock in/out is a violation of this policy and includes:

- i) Failure to clock in/out on their allocated time clock (i.e. Kronos station) at the beginning and/or end of their assigned work shift;
- ii) Failure to clock in/out on their allotted time clock for the meal break;
- iii) Failure to exactly and timely report for work.
- iv) Clocking in/out early (or late) of assigned shift without prior approval.

5.3 Departmental Notification Procedure

Employees are expected to follow departmental notification procedures if they are late for work, absence from work, or requesting time off. Punishment for late reporting for work is normally by pay cut. Appropriate amount of worker's salary will be deducted according to standard guidelines stipulated by the employer. Employees must request in advance through their superior and in accordance with departmental procedure if they wish to change or revise their assigned work shift.

6. Occurrences

Any occurrences will be documented as absence, tardy or missed the clock in/out time. While an absence refers to a single failure to be at work, an occurrence may cover consecutive absent days when an employee is taking time off for the same reason.

The following grid, shown in Table 1, is designed to provide guidelines when addressing the total number of occurrences in a rolling 12 month period, provided that the reason for an occurrence is not contravene with applicable rules and regulations.

	Occurrences/Days	Discipline Step and Action
Occurrence 1 Occurrence is equal to: • 1 Absence • 2 Tardies • 2 Missed Clocks	4 Occurrences	Step 1: Verbal Warning
	6 Occurrences	Step 2: Written Warning

	10 Occurrences	Step 4: Termination

7. Sense Of Ownership

In the modern corporate environment, where time spent in one company has shortened drastically, it is becoming increasingly important to inculcate a sense of ownership amongst the employees to retain talent. Shreya Roy finds out how employees can be transformed into having sense of attachment to what they do.

Compromising on mistakes is a very important part of building a sense of ownership amongst the employees. "In your own business, you are bound to go through trial and error, and you learn from them. Do that with your employees as well. Employees should feel safe and innovate by taking chances," says Maclean Raphael, executive director — human resources, 3M, India and Sri Lanka.

7.1 Let employees speak out

Employees feel like part of a greater whole when they can contribute ideas and solutions to problems. Intel, for instance, used crowd-sourcing for inputs on how it could be a better place to work in. "The tool we used to crowd-source allowed employees to rate each other's inputs, and build on each other's ideas to make Intel a better place to work," says Preethi Madappa, HR director, Intel India.

7.2 Clarify where things are headed

Show employees the 'big picture' of the organization. Share the good news as well as the bad news. "Create visibility, use plain speak, talk about the challenges and explain what you are still trying to figure out in an open and transparent manner." adds Madappa.

7.3 Illustrate benefits beyond money

Employees need to see long-term benefits, and not just the show of money. "Provide them opportunities for learning and development, ask for contributions through action, thoughts, projects; implement the ones which can be taken up," says Sangeetalala, senior vice president and co-founder, Team Lease Services.

7.4 Show respect

Nothing drives people as much as being treated well, with respect and in a level playing field. "It is important to practice equality and diversity across the organization. Any job you do is going to "have your fingerprints all over it." That is why it is so important to take ownership of your job, anything you do, and really own it. Do it the best you can; do it the best it can be done. That is how you succeed.

8. Job Indicator

8.1 Competencies

Competencies are observable behaviors that encompass the knowledge, skills, and personal characteristics that distinguish levels of performance in working environment. Below are competencies that have been identified as fundamental for every job at work place. They serve as the basis for the supervisor's assessment of employee performance.

Additional Competencies

A supervisor may add competencies that he or she believes are unique to the specific department or job. Additional competencies are optional and may not be needed in many departments; however, competencies are not to be deleted.

i. Performance Indicators

Following each competency is a brief definition of the competency followed by a bulleted list of performance indicators. Achievement in these areas will directly relate to successful performance. The bulleted indicators are examples; they are intended to be illustrative only. It is the supervisor's responsibility to identify for the employee which of the indicators apply to the job and modify them, or create new indicators, as appropriate. It is not required to address all of the indicators.

8.2 Class of competencies.

There are classes of competency involve in management of hierarchy. One grade y be applicable to all staff positions. Another is restricted to staff members who are in managerial/supervisory positions and/or who hold leadership roles. The supervisor may determine whether this section applies to the employee based on his/her responsibilities.
