PENERANGAN / INFORMATION:

1. Overview

Many corporations are focused on growth with the least cost. Achieving high revenue with profit through great level of work force efficiency. Leaders are looking for a break through performance and productivity gains from employees. To achieve these gains, organizations have to be ready with dramatic shifts underway in the work environment and refocus on enabling higher levels of workforce performance.

2. Setting Performance Standards / Expectations

In view of setting up performance standards and expectations, a manager needs to be obliged by the followings;

- i) Review job description for the position
- ii) Determine desirable result for most of the employees duties
- iii) Describe the quality performance required such as communication, customer service, interpersonal skills, etc.
- iv) Describe how much work must be accomplished within prescribed period with standard of accuracy, document style/format or effectiveness
- v) Ensure results are achievable and realistic. Indicate needed source of reference
- vi) Determine how performance of duty will be measured

2.1 Advantages to setting performance standard / expectations

Setting performance targets for your organisation does not warrant an increase in your bottom line. Fixing goals setting will help the company and staff working for a common result. Meeting important targets will initiate the company's current success and future growth. Your goals should be measurable so that you can achieve a quantitative analysis of your progress. Identifying the vital indicators of your company's success will help you establish accurate performance targets. For example, the number of customers you have may not be as important as the total revenue your sales generate.

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

Measuring the company's success through reachable targets will assist the management in analyzing areas where business is doing well or needs improvements. If the management relies purely on figures that represent total sales, revenue or profits, you may not be able to detect exactly the growth and reduction in operations.

The followings are key points achievable in setting performance standards and expectations;

- i) Employee can differentiate between acceptable and unacceptable results
- ii) Management has specific criteria to measure quality and productivity
- iii) Provide objective base for communicating about performance
- iv) Encourage open relationship and trust with employees
- v) Help employees understand the importance of their duties and prioritize it
- vi) Help employees measure their doings and know when to ask for support
- vii) Help employees to distinguish where improvements are essential in their performance

2.2 Sample standards / expectations

The followings are some examples indicating standards and expectation which are anticipated by the management of an organisation.

- i) Interact professionally, courteously, efficiently and friendly when dealing with customers, the general public and co-workers
- ii) Achieve high level of productivity and accuracy
- iii) Punctuality in attendance and work presentations
- iv) Attend and manage effectively the required assignments and meetings
- v) Complete relevant professional development trainings/courses accordingly
- vi) Demonstrate dignity, maturity, positive attitude and self-confidence when dealing with others
- vii) Work intelligently and receptive to changes
- viii) Comply and abide by local legislative, policies and rules and regulations.
- ix) Competent and proficient in administrative works, paper works and report writings

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

Performance measurement is basically deal with result of work done. The purpose is to reduce variations in the products, services and its process to produce them. It helps to understand, manage and improve the organization's activities. The unit of measure gives a magnitude in relation to its measurement and always tied up with the objective or targets of measurements.

Performance can be measured through;

- i) Direct observation
- ii) Specific work results
- iii) Reports and records
- iv) Commendations or comments received from others

3. Provide feedback

The return of information about the results of processes or activities. It is used for evaluating the response or finding for betterment. Feedback should fulfill these criteria.

- i) Should be specific
- ii) Should be timely and/or immediate
- iii) Focused on behaviour or performance and not the person
- iv) Intended to help and not for control purpose
- v) Sincere and faithful in giving information
- vi) Frequent and informal
- vii) Well documented

3.1 Forms of feedback

Feedback can be tracked intentionally or unintentionally. Feedback should help an employee feel motivated to improve their performance. Amongst the most common feedbacks are conveyed through;

- i) Verbal comments - praise/criticism
- ii) Non-verbal gestures and cues or silence responds
- iii) Memorandums or e-mails
- iv) Strike-through and corrections on written work

4.1 Change and Agility

Effectively deals with change and shifts gears when needed. It is productive and can move forward on work efforts without having all the information by maintaining positive outlook when plans are challenged. Change should be able to manage risk and uncertainty by communicating to all concerns about the change in order to avoid negative behaviors or resistance to change.

4.2 Creativity

It develops innovative ideas and methods of doing things. Searches for new and more effective methods, to connect the past unrelated ideas which contribute in brainstorming settings. Creativity is very resourceful when challenged by obstacles.

4.3 Leadership

Serves as a role model for others. Inspires respect and trust; fosters a culture with high standards of ethics. Good leadership reacts well under pressure; maintains focus and intensity, remains optimistic and persistent when facing adversity. High quality leaders recover quickly from setbacks.

Among other things, a leader functions to influence others to transfer vision into action. He assumes a long-term view and acts as a catalyst for organizational change. Competent in building consensus to tolerate cooperation in order to accomplish goals.

4.4 Meetings

Accountable to put everything in order, participates actively and follows up on actions as appropriate. Minimizes meetings when possible by using alternative communication mechanisms.

4.5 Problem Solving

Problem solving is accomplished after a combination of logic, analysis, and knowledge are considered. Probe appropriate sources to identify the benefits, drawbacks, and probable outcomes for each proposed solution. It is also equally important to be aware of levels of inclusion necessary for ownership and effective action.

4.6 Project Management

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

This segment creates plans for each project and manages it to the plan. Proactively it works the issues and keeps management informed of schedule, budget, or other major subjects. Able to define the required scope of work, requirements, and project deliverables.

Project Management prepares timeline of project objective and identifies resources required to meet the target. It also prepares project status report and the progress of project or any changes to the plans.

5. Quality of Work on Performance Improvement

Keep the discussion positive and informal. Nothing produces anxiety in managers and employees quite like a performance review. Unless everything is perfect and there is no room for improvement, you have to provide constructive criticism and your employee has to listen. Quality of work is especially difficult because you want to help your employees improve without causing them to become defensive. Planning and organizing on your part in developing and presenting the review can lead to improved performance and a stronger working relationship.

i) Step 1

Approach the interview with a focused plan. Prepare a list of strengths and weaknesses, including examples, if needed, and strategies for growth to discuss with your employees. Prioritize your concerns so that the most important issues can be resolved first.

ii) Step 2

Discuss examples of especially strong performance. Starting with your employees strengths helps them relax and be more open to feedback concerning weaker areas. In addition, it helps them focus on what you like, enabling them to continue developing those skills.

iii) Step 3

Organize areas of weakness into themes. For example, your employees may struggle with customer service. Instead of discussing phone calls, returns and follow-up separately, group them together into "customer service." A few themed areas of improvement are easier to absorb than a laundry list of specific problems.

iv) Step 4

Ask your employees to comment on areas of concern. Prompt them to discuss both what they enjoy most about those tasks and what they struggle with. This approach sets up a dialogue that you can use to work together to help them improve their performance. For example, if they acknowledge avoiding follow-up phone calls, use the discussion to find out why and then work with them to strategize a better response.

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

v) Step 5

Follow your employees' comments with observations of your own. Keep the conversation constructive and proactive to reduce their defensiveness. Only use specific examples, if needed. Focus on improving their performance by using their weaknesses as learning opportunities. For example, if you are unhappy with how they sets up displays, offer to spend a few minutes after hours explaining your approach or suggest a seminar on merchandising.

vi) Step 6

Emphasize your employees' job performance in relation to their personal goals. Helping them recognize the connection between the skills they are learning and their goals will motivate them to address areas of weakness. For example, an employee who wants to go into marketing, but has weak organizational skills, might not realize the effect his disorganized presentation has. Show hem that customers often perceive disorganization as amateurish, resulting in a poor image presentation and a negative marketing effect.

vii) Step 7

Focus on a poor fit, or your inability to provide sufficient training, if you have to terminate some employees. Emphasize the positive aspects of their performance, and suggest jobs that might be a better match for their skills or additional training from which they might benefit. Keeping the conversation proactive when the review becomes an exit interview reduces defensiveness and might help your employees find a more satisfying position.
