ANSWER

QUESTION 1

a. Answer : Can be any 3 steps of these 4 steps :

Step 1: Create your organization's mission statement. The mission statement describes why your organization exists. Suggests that an initial mission statement shouldn't be longer than half a page. Include who the primary beneficiary is and how it will be helped, the values that your organization believes in, and how you want your organization to be perceived.

Step 2: Verify that your beneficiary needs help and isn't served by another organization. Going through the trouble of starting an organization only to discover that the beneficiary doesn't need help is a waste of resources. Alternatively, if the beneficiary is already being served by another nonprofit, then you'll be forced to compete for market share -- and possibly damage the beneficiary in the process.

Step 3: Fund the nonprofit. You can either seek a sponsor or raise funds. If your sponsor has its own tax-exempt and tax-deductible status, then it can share them with you. Sponsors are useful if the organization doesn't have enough money to pay for the legal fees associated with filing for tax-exempt status. If you plan to raise funds, you'll need to file Articles of Incorporation with your state attorney general. You'll also need to open a bank account. If you plan to sell merchandise to raise funds, you'll need to apply for a sales permit.

Step 4: Apply for tax-exempt or tax-deductible status if you're not sponsored by another nonprofit. Once you have established your organization in your state, you can apply for tax-exempt or deductible status with the Internal Revenue Service. Keep in mind that this process is often complicated.

d. Answer:

Table 1: The elements of a KPI

Strategy	KPIs embody a strategic objective.
Targets	KPIs measure performance against specific targets. Targets are defined in strategic, planning or budget sessions and can take different forms (e.g., achievement, reduction, absolute, zero).
Ranges	Targets have ranges of performance (e.g., above, on, or below target).
Encodings	Ranges are encoded by enabling the visual display of performance (e.g., green, yellow, red). Encodings can be based on percentages or more complex rules.
Time frames	Targets are assigned time frames by which they must be accomplished. A time frame is often divided into smaller intervals to provide mileposts of performance along the way.
Benchmarks	Targets are measured against a baseline or benchmark. The previous year's results often serve as a benchmark.

Types of KPIs

There are two fundamental types of KPIs: outcomes and drivers.

Outcome KPIs known as lagging indicators which measure the output of past activity. Examples include revenues, margins, return on equity, customer satisfaction and employee retention.

Driver KPIs known as leading indicators or value drivers which measure activities that have a significant impact on outcome KPIs. These KPIs measure activity in its current state or a future state.

QUESTION 2

a. Answer: Any Five

i) Lack of time:

Delegating jobs does take time. In the early stages of taking over a job you may need to invest time in training people to take over tasks. Jobs may take longer to achieve with delegation than they do for you to do by yourself, when coaching and checking are taken into account. In time, with the right people, you will find that the time taken up reduces significantly as your coaching investment pays back.

ii) Perfectionism - fear of mistakes:

Just as you have to develop staff to do jobs quickly without your involvement, you will have to let people make mistakes, and help them to correct them. Most people will, with time, learn to do jobs properly.

iii) Enjoying 'getting my hands dirty':

By doing jobs yourself you will probably get them done effectively. If, however, your assistants are standing idle while you do this, then your department will be seriously inefficient. Bear in mind the cost of your time and the cost of your department's time when you are tempted to do a job yourself.

iv) Fear of surrendering authority:

Whenever you delegate, you surrender some element of authority (but not of responsibility!) This is inevitable. By effective delegation, however, you get the benefits of adequate time to do YOUR job really well.

v) Fear of becoming invisible:

Where your department is running smoothly with all routine work effectively delegated, it may appear that you have nothing to do. Now you have the time to think and plan and improve operations (and plan your next career step!)

vi) Belief that staff 'are not up to the job':

Good people will often under-perform if they are bored. Delegation will often bring the best out of them. People who are not so good will not be effective unless you invest time in them. Even incompetent people can be effective, providing they find their level. The only people who cannot be reliably delegated to are those whose opinions of their own abilities are so inflated that they will not co-operate.

It is common for people who are newly promoted to managerial positions to have difficulty delegating. Often they will have been promoted because they were good at what they were doing. This brings the temptation to continue trying to do their previous job, rather than developing their new subordinates to do the job well.

b. Answer: any Five

1. Date

Everything revolves around the date of your event. Ideally you want to have three potential dates in mind so that you can compare availability and prices across the board. Try to include different days of the week for maximum flexibility.

2. Time Frame

One single hour difference can make an impact on your planning, so you really need to be specific about your anticipated time frames. For example, starting at 10am instead of 8am means you may not need to allocate a breakfast budget.

3. Attendance Numbers

This is one detail that is often too broadly estimated for productive negotiations. Get realistic with your attendance projections. Discuss in advance who you will invite and put your projections together on a spreadsheet. Attendance and budget are directly correlated, so don't haphazardly guess about the number of people you think will attend.

4. Breakout Sessions

You may only need one banquet room if you are hosting a dinner, but a full scale conference will likely require additional breakout rooms and an exhibition space. Once again, you won't be able to measure costs until you define how much space you need. For conferences, the best approach is to plan a mock itinerary in your very first meeting. Sharing ideas and piecing them together on paper will help steer you through the next planning decisions.

5. Budget vs. Costs

It might sound impractical to work on a budget before knowing venue and catering costs, but working this way provides a benchmark for you to measure all of vendor proposals. Begin with your revenue sources.

- How much should you charge for attendance?
- Will you call on sponsors to help offset costs A?

- What will exhibitors pay to participate?
- Revenues will ultimately dictate your budget, so it only makes sense to project them first.

6. Marketing

After you have identified your revenue sources, the next step is to outline your marketing plan. What is the best way to reach and engage your revenue generators? Perhaps you have a list of potential attendees as an employer or membership association. That would obviously be helpful, but what about sponsors and exhibitors? If you are planning to attract more exhibitors then you must be able to reach them. Targeted marketing campaigns cost money, and that cuts into your revenues.

7. Transportation and Lodging

Running a local conference typically eliminates any concerns about transportation. However, you still need to address lodging for speakers, exhibitors and special guests. Some hotels provide discounts on meeting space if you book enough room nights. The only way to capitalize on this is by knowing your lodging needs in advance. Go back through your attendance data and project how many guests are from outside your area.

Now all of this probably sounds like a lot of information to gather up front, and it is. But keep in mind that these are the details that affect everything else in the planning process. You might be initially attracted to the more 'glamorous' tasks, like site visits and menu planning. Just remember that their time will come. For now though, focus on the facts so that you can make the best decisions later.
