PENERANGAN/INFORMATION :

1. Build an effective and cohesive team

1.1 Clarify the common goals and purposes. Make the team's purposes clear. Take the time to articulate the team's performance goals and how the team contributes to the company's success. Even a work group that has existed for some time may never have done this. In any case, the purposes and conditions change over time. If you are a new boss, you will be putting your own stamp on the group's common goal.

1.2 Clarify each person's role in achieving the common purpose. Define each person's job in terms of its contribution to the group's and the company's overall goals. This must be done in specific terms, not in vague generalities. For example, "We're working under very tight timelines. Joe, you'll be in charge of overall project coordination, so you will set the timetable for each project phase. Betty, can I ask you to take responsibility for writing the brochures and getting them printed? Maribeth and Scott, I'd like you to work together on the transportation requirements, OK? Let's meet again tomorrow afternoon at 3:00 for an update and a progress check. Does that work for everybody?"

1.3 Put team members in touch with people who relates to what they do. Confirm the needs of the team's external or internal customers or clients on an ongoing basis. For example, "Tom, be sure to talk with both Materials Management and the folks in Production to make sure they're aware of the changes we've planned. Our changes could affect their work if we're all not in sync."

1.4 Pay attention to conflicts when they arise. It's natural for conflict to arise when people work in groups. Conflict, handled well, can actually produce constructive ideas. Sometimes team members will annoy each other, step on each other's toes, or hurt each other's feelings. Honest disagreements can become personal and heated. Work processes that seemed efficient can break down. It's important to recognize that some degree of conflict among co-workers is normal. Let problems come to the surface. Avoid the impulse to demand that your employees "drop it," "forget about it," or "just cut it out." Also, anticipate that more conflicts may occur whenever there are changes that affect the team's membership or goals.

1.5 Work out ways to resolve conflicts. What works as an effective style of conflict resolution varies from team to team, and may vary over time on the same team. Teams whose members all have similar experience and seniority may be able to settle problems more informally, for example, than a team with more diversity. Here are some ways to successfully resolve conflicts: - Make sure each team member involved has a chance to explain the problem as he or she sees it. - Establish clear ground rules so that people can have their say without being interrupted, rushed, mocked, or intimidated. - Encourage employees to solve problems themselves when they can so that you aren't always in the middle of every conflict between team members. However, if they cannot solve them, it's important that they can count on you to coach them through a problem-solving framework that allows them to build conflict resolution skills for the future.

1.6 Remember your leadership role. While you need to encourage your employees to feel a healthy "ownership" of the team's work, you need to avoid trying to be "just one of the team." You -- not your team -- are the one accountable to your own boss for the team's results. You're expected to get results through your people. Hold each employee responsible for meeting goals and for solving or helping to solve problems.

1.7 Make sure team members interact at meetings. Do team members mainly address their questions and suggestions to you, or do they interact directly with each other at meetings? Encourage team members to ask each other for help and to offer it to each other, without channeling it all through you. Synergy on teams is achieved when team members feel comfortable speaking up with suggestions that build on the creativity of other team members. This requires collaboration not competition. Dominance of a group by a manager or supervisor can limit the chances a group has to achieve real synergy. Also, competition within the team may increase as members vie for the manager's attention.

1.8 Allow team members to have input into their jobs. When you can, give your employees flexibility on how they meet their work goals. Encourage employees to make suggestions about changes in what they do and how they do it, based on their direct and daily experience of what works, what doesn't work, and what could work better. Of course, the only way to encourage employees to make suggestions over the long run is to show them that you will act on some of their suggestions.

NO. KOD / CODE NO.	Z-009-4:2015-M01/K(2/7)	Mukasurat / Page : 4 Drpd / Of : 14

1.9 Make sure there is room for minority or unpopular views. Teams can easily slip into "group think," especially when they are successful. Those who see flaws in the way the group does things, or who see improvements that could be made, may be politely ignored or even treated with hostility. Teams where this happens can fail when their environment or requirements change and they can't adapt. Effective managers build team trust by encouraging a diversity of opinion. Ask, specifically, for other viewpoints. Inquiring into views that may not have been spoken can allow better team performance. By asking the team, "What else do we need to consider here?" you allow perspectives not yet considered to be put on the table and evaluated. Those in the majority must be able to trust that those who disagree do so honestly and with good intentions. Those in the minority must be able to trust that they can speak up without being punished or left out.

1.10 Appraise and reward the team as a whole. As with an individual performance review, compare the team's performance to what was expected of it. Plan small celebrations of the team achieving important milestones. Acknowledgments of incremental successes can be more motivating than big end-of-project rewards. Celebrations could range from pizza at lunch, to dinner at a nice restaurant, to a bonus, or to a congratulatory letter from a senior executive that goes in each employee's personnel file. Keep in mind that the team review can never take the place of individual performance reviews.

1.11 Appraise and reward each employee individually, including a review of his or her teamwork. As members of a team, the expectations and criteria for their performance include showing a spirit of cooperation, developing conflict resolution skills, engaging in good communication with others, and being willing to help others solve problems or get through crunch efforts. If feasible, encourage all team members to provide meaningful feedback to one another. Be sure to give each team member specific feedback about his or her strengths and any unique role that the person served on the team rather than just focusing on problems or performance gaps.

2. Keys to Successful Teamwork

Communicate team successes. If possible, let the whole company know what your team has accomplished. Include a specific description of what you did, why it's important to the company, and what challenges had to be overcome. Name people who made key contributions, including those outside your group. Be sure to include those who are usually left out of such acknowledgments, such as the receptionist who handled the flood of calls after a successful public relations effort or the information technology people who installed the complex software you used.

2.1 The team understands the goals and is committed to attaining them. This clear direction and agreement on mission and purpose is essential for effective teamwork. This team clarity is reinforced when the organization has clear expectations for the team's work, goals, accountability, and outcomes.

2.2 The team creates an environment in which people are comfortable taking reasonable risks in communicating, advocating positions, and taking action. Team members trust each other. Team members are not punished for disagreeing.

2.3 Communication is open, honest, and respectful. People feel free to express their thoughts, opinions, and potential solutions to problems. People feel as if they are heard out and listened to by team members who are attempting to understand. Team members ask questions for clarity and spend their thought time listening deeply rather than forming rebuttals while their coworker is speaking.

2.4 Team members have a strong sense of belonging to the group. They experience a deep commitment to the group's decisions and actions. This sense of belonging is enhanced and reinforced when the team spends the time to develop team norms or relationship guidelines together.

2.5 Team members are viewed as unique people with irreplaceable experiences, points of view, knowledge, and opinions to contribute. After all, the purpose for forming a team is to take advantage of the differences.

Otherwise, why would any organization approach projects, products, or goals with a team. In fact, the more that a team can bring out divergent points of view, that are thoughtfully presented and supported with facts as well as opinions, the better.

2.6 Creativity, innovation, and different viewpoints are expected and encouraged. Comments such as, "we already tried that and it didn't work" and "what a dumb idea" are not allowed or supported.

2.7 The team is able to constantly examine itself and continuously improve its processes, practices, and the interaction of team members. The team openly discusses team norm sand what may be hindering its ability to move forward and progress in areas of effort, talent, and strategy.

2.8 The team has agreed upon procedures for diagnosing, analyzing, and resolving team work problems and conflicts. The team does not support member personality conflicts and clashes nor do team members pick sides in a disagreement. Rather, members work towards mutual resolution.

2.9 Participative leadership is practiced in leading meetings, assigning tasks, recording decisions and commitments, assessing progress, holding team members accountable, and providing direction for the team.

2.10 Members of the team make high quality decisions together and have the support and commitment of the group to carry out the decisions made.

3. The secrets to successful teamwork: Trust and accountability

Oftentimes, life would be great if it weren't for other people! Yet, it's through relationships with others that you often obtain the greatest rewards. Your office/workplace is where you spend many hours of your life, so getting along and working productively with your colleagues is very important. Unfortunately, many employees experience stress because team members argue, give each other the silent treatment or allow one person to do all the work.

So, how can you find ways to get along and create a successful team? Trust and respect are two essential elements for building relationships in the workplace and beyond. It's all about the relationships you have with people – which doesn't necessarily mean friendships. Relationships are built over time, when one person has respect for another. Gradually, trust beings to build, too. You don't have to be a close personal friend with everyone at work, but you do always need to show each person respect and professionalism.

Here are some guidelines to facilitate accountability and build trust among your team:

3.1 Define the duties.

Eighty percent of the job is specified by your job description and responsibilities. Twenty percent of your time, however, is spent helping colleagues and clients. Create an atmosphere where everyone bends over backward for the other person. A successful, trusted and well-respected team member uses words like, absolutely or certainly when asked for help. Look for things that need to be done and do them without being asked! This is the true definition of teamwork.

3.2 Be clear with prospective employees during the interview process.

What are your expectations? Hold your existing employees and new hires to consistent standards, outlined in your policy manual. True teamwork demands that all employees are held to the same standards and, most importantly, do whatever is necessary to take care of the customer!

3.3 Define your expectations in a workplace policy manual.

A personnel policy and workplace manual should cover individual and team responsibilities. If you don't already have one, or if you have one that needs updating, be sure it includes items such as:

- Job description
- Office and working hours
- Leave time
- Professional appearance, including body piercing, tattoos and hair color
- Salary

3.4 Other benefits Check with your attorney on your individual state hiring/employment laws and craft your manual accordingly. Be aware, however, that more important than defining your expectations: You need to be consistent in holding all employees to the same standard or else you will create an atmosphere of favoritism!

3.5 Outline the time commitment and set aside adequate time for each task. It is not fair to assign or accept a responsibility and then have no time to accomplish the task. Be realistic about the timeframe, and make sure your team members are aware of the deadlines for each project they take on.

3.6 Be careful to not overload your staff with too many commitments or too many interruptions. They will get discouraged and burned out. Instead, focus on delegating one task at a time, communicating the objective and timeframe clearly.

3.7 Follow through by putting a note on your calendar to check on progress. If you don't check on progress, the task may not be accomplished. Find out how the project is progressing and show interest. Ask questions about the task, and offer your advice and help if needed. Recognize your employee for taking on the responsibility. It is discouraging for a team member to work hard and not received recognition for a job well done!

3.8 Avoid showing favouritism toward specific team members. To build trust and accountability, businesses need consistent leadership. One way is to have effective team meetings on a regular basis for feedback and input on projects. With team meetings, allow your staff members the opportunity to volunteer for special tasks and projects. Remember, it's impossible to build trust if one person is favored over others. Ask yourself: Do your staff members believe they are treated fairly, without prejudice? Do some feel excluded from the decision-making process? Does one person "do it all?" When there is no accountability, oftentimes one person will pick up the slack and take on too many responsibilities.

3.9 Encourage your team members to stand up and lead!

Ask them about their concerns and the collective concerns of the team. Often, team express concerns about drama in the workplace, other team members making personal calls during business hours, and team members bringing personal issues from home to work. Other concerns often involve not enough training on new systems, negativity in the office or people not taking responsibility. As a leader, do what you can to resolve these issues before they become areas of contention or conflict.

3.10 Open the lines of communication by having an open-door policy.

Manage by “walking around.” Know the concerns of your team and deal with them head on. Ignoring your staff’s concerns will NOT make them go away! Be positive in your approach and dependable in your attitude. Do not lose your temper. Instead, be reasonable and predicable. If you respond inappropriately, whether out of anger or insult, your team will remember the 10 percent of the time that you were out of control, not the 90 percent of the time that you did well.

3.11 Ask your team members to bend over backwards for each other.

To do this, begin a team meeting session by asking your staff to define the qualities of teamwork that impress them. Ask them to think about someone they’ve known in the past or present that represents a true team player: What are the attributes of this person? Often you’ll hear: Consistency, fairness, general cheerfulness, flexibility, positivity and the willingness to change. How do you rate in these categories?

3.12 Bonus tip

True teamwork means encouraging individual leadership development. To win in today’s market, you need to step up and take a leadership role and ask the same of your team members. Ask your team members to listen. At your team meetings, encourage respectful listening. Allow others to speak, without interruption. Let their voice be heard.

---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

There are four things team members need to feel great about their workplace and feel like a team member:

- a. Appreciation and recognition
- b. A sense of belonging to a close knit team
- c. Responsibility and a feeling that their voice matters
- d. Money: pay and benefits

By following these steps and increasing the accountability of your office staff, you create trust and respect in the workplace. With these changes, your sense of teamwork and trust will grow, while decreasing your levels of stress and conflict!

Sincere listening will increase your level of teamwork! To do this, ask questions. Instead of giving direct orders, ask questions to guide your team members to think through issues and come up with their own solutions. You will find that ownership and subsequent responsibility for the task increase when the team member develops the solution. Lastly, value your staff. Reassure your team members that their contribution and leadership does have a huge impact on your company's growth and survival.

4. Description of the Multicultural Personality Questionnaire (MPQ)

The Multicultural Personality Questionnaire (MPQ) is a personality assessment questionnaire that was constructed specifically to describe behavior when one is interacting with people from different cultures. The MPQ may be used to predict how easily people are likely to adjust to other cultures and come to feel at home with them.

Here is a short description of each of the five personality factors assessed by the MPQ:

4.1 Cultural empathy

This scale assesses the capacity to identify with the feelings, thoughts and behavior of individuals from different cultural backgrounds. To function effectively with people of other cultures, it is important to acquire some understanding of those cultures, and cultural empathy seems important to "reading" other cultures. People who score high on cultural empathy are able to identify with the feelings, thoughts, and behaviors of people and groups who are part of different cultures. People with a low score have difficulties in identifying with the feelings, thoughts and behaviors of people and groups with different cultural backgrounds.

4.2 Open-mindedness

This scale assesses people's capacity to be open and unprejudiced when encountering people outside of their own cultural group and who may have different values and norms. This ability, just like cultural empathy, seems vital to understanding the rules and values of other cultures and to coping with them in an effective manner. People who score high on open-mindedness have an open and unprejudiced attitude towards other groups, cultural values and norms and are open to new ideas. People who score low are characterized by a predisposed attitude and a tendency to judge and stereotype other groups.

4.3 Social Initiative

Social initiative denotes people's tendency to approach social situations actively and to take initiative. This determines the degree to which they interact easily with people from different cultures and make friends within other cultures. People who score high on this scale have a tendency to be active in social situations and to take initiative. They will tend to be out-going when in another culture. People who score low on this scale are less inclined to take initiative. They will be rather reserved and stay in the background.

4.4 Emotional stability

This scale assesses the degree to which people tend to remain calm in stressful situations. When working in another culture it is important to be able to cope well with psychological and emotional discomfort. A variety of factors (political system, procedures, lack of means and resources, impediments) may cause things in different cultures not to work in the same way as they do in one's own culture. When things do not go the way they do in one's own culture, this may lead to frustration, tension, fear, social detachment, financial problems and interpersonal conflicts. People who score high on this scale tend to remain calm in stressful situations. People who score low on this scale exhibit strong emotional reactions to stress.

4.5 Flexibility

This scale is associated with people's ability to adjust their behaviour to new and unknown situations. When working in another culture it is important to be able to change strategies because customary and trusted ways of doing things do not always work in a new cultural environment. People who score high on flexibility perceive new and unknown situations as a challenge. They are able to change behavioural patterns in response to unexpected or constrained circumstances within another culture.

People who score low are quicker to see new and unknown situations as a threat. In additions, they tend to stick to trusted behavioural patterns. Consequently, they are less able to adjust their behavioural pattern in reaction to unexpected or constrained circumstances in another culture.
