PENERANGAN/ INFORMATION :

1. Principles Of Ethical Discipline

1.1 Decision making

- i) Ethical decision-making refers to the process of evaluating and choosing among alternatives in a manner consistent with ethical principles. In making ethical decisions, it is necessary to perceive and eliminate unethical options and select the best ethical alternative.
- ii) The process of making ethical decisions requires
 - a) Commitment: The desire to do the right thing regardless of the cost
 - b) Consciousness: The awareness to act consistently and apply moral convictions to daily behavior
 - c) Competency: The ability to collect and evaluate information, develop alternatives, and foresee potential consequences and risks.

1.2 Good decisions are both ethical and effective

- i) Ethical decisions generate and sustain trust; demonstrate respect, responsibility, fairness and caring; and are consistent with good citizenship. These behaviors provide a foundation for making better decisions by setting the ground rules for our behavior.
- ii) Effective decisions are effective if they accomplish what we want accomplished and if they advance our purposes. A choice that produces unintended and undesirable results is ineffective. The key to making effective decisions is to think about choices in terms of their ability to accomplish our most important goals. This means we have to understand the difference between immediate and short-term goals and longer-range goals.

2. Appearance

2.1 Appearance deals with every aspect of how we perceive an individual. In an instant, we form opinions about a person based on that individual's appearance, smell, cleanliness, and mannerisms. Those brief seconds define how we treat others or are treated by others. Likewise, our appearance is a direct reflection of the environment in which we were raised (i.e. a reflection upon our parents and families). Through our actions and appearance, others may form a lasting, and sometimes detrimental, impression of us that we may never overcome.

2.2 Depending on the career field, acceptable appearances may vary. However, regardless of the job, there is no excuse for not being groomed, being neat, practicing good personal hygiene, or using correct and polite behavior. A lack of attention on the part in any of these areas can affect the job and/or the business.

2.3 A person who is groomed and neat in appearance has cleaned and combed hair that is styled appropriately for the job or class. Clothes are pressed, shirttails tucked in, shoelaces tied, and so on. Stockings are run-free, and shoe heels are appropriate for the job or class. Make-up and cologne are tastefully applied without being overbearing. Nails are clean and manicured and are an appropriate length for the classroom or lab.

2.4 The practice of good personal hygiene is a must. Daily bathing, especially in our region of the country, is a necessity. Body perspiration causes odors that can be very offensive to others. The heat and humidity we experience in the South compounds this problem. The use of a deodorant and antiperspirant is only effective as long as the body is clean and free of dirt and sweat. Likewise, good oral hygiene and brushing and flossing daily aid in the prevention of bad breath, cavities, and gum disease.

3. Communication

3.1 Communication occurs when a sender expresses an emotion or a feeling, creates an idea, or senses the need to communicate. The communication process is triggered when the sender makes a conscious or an unconscious decision to share the message with another person—the receiver.

3.2 Every communicative act is based on something that conveys meaning, and that conveyance is the message. The message may be either verbal (spoken or written) or nonverbal (body language, physical appearance, or vocal tone). Messages may also come from the context—or place and time—of the communication.

3.3 Every message is sent and received through one of our five senses—it is seen, heard, touched, tasted, or smelled. The sensory media through which messages are sent and received are communication channels. In a work setting, messages may be seen through body movement, letters, memos, newsletters, bulletin board notices, signs, emails, and so on. Messages that are heard come through conversations, interviews, presentations, telephones, radios, and other audio media. Sight and sound are the two most frequent communication channels used in our society.

3.4 When the receiver gets the message (through seeing, hearing, feeling, touching, or smelling), he or she will usually give feedback (return message) unconsciously or consciously. Thus, the communications process is on-going.

3.5 The worst assumption a sender of a message can make is that the message will be received as intended. So many things can go wrong during the communications process that we should always assume that something will go wrong and take steps to prevent that occurrence. Barriers to good communications are always present. For instance, the language itself can be a barrier—unclear wording, slang, jargon, the tone.

3.6 Another barrier is the failure of the sender to realize that his or her body language might contradict the spoken message. The channel used to convey the message might be wrong. For instance, you would not use the telephone to relay a lot of statistical information; you would need to write that message on paper. Poor listening skills can constitute a barrier also.

4. Behaviour

4.1 Correct and polite behavior is the acceptable conduct for class or a job. It shows respect for oneself as well as others. Acceptable behavior may include:

- i) Not interrupting others while they are talking;
- ii) Not carrying on side conversations while someone is talking;
- iii) Considering other's feelings and concerns when making decisions or comments;
- iv) Being respectful of the instructor and classmates;
- v) Avoiding arguments and disagreements;
- vi) Providing assistance when asked;
- vii) Using terms such as "please" and "thank you."

5. Ethical Behaviour

5.1 Acting in ways consistent with what society and individuals typically think are good values. Ethical behavior tends to be good for business and involves demonstrating respect for key moral principles that include honesty, fairness, equality, dignity, diversity and individual rights.

5.2 Ethical business practices include assuring that the highest legal and moral standards are observed in the relationships with the people in the business community. Short term profit at the cost of losing a customer is long term death for the business.

5.3 A reputation for ethical decisions builds trust in the business among business associates and suppliers. Strong supplier relationships are critical to a successful business. Consider the problems might have if we could not supply what the customer needs at the time that they need it.

5.4 The entrepreneur is the role model for employees. If the behavior includes lying to customers, taking money out of the cash register, or taking home some of the inventory or supplies, we are cannot be surprised if the employees follow the lead. The family members may see the business as their own and take things that really belong to the business. Employees may see this as being dishonest, or as a conflict with their needs for a raise in pay.

5.5 Ethical behavior is merely making good business decisions based on an established "code of ethics". Entrepreneurs should establish a written code of ethics that can serve as a framework for decisions to be made by the entrepreneur as well as the employees. In developing this code of ethics you should consider the following items:

- i) Identify the general principles that would lead to fair business practices.
- ii) Check with the industry association for basic standards to review
- iii) Allow for the fact that ethical questions do not always have a unique, faultless answer.
- iv) Write out specific statements that will assist you and others in making day-to-day ethical decisions.
- v) Apply the code of ethics to a written policy and procedure manual identifying the major rules for operating the business.
- vi) Train the employees (and family members) to make ethical decisions about the business.

5.6 The code of ethics will apply to all types of business operations including the followings:

- i) Handling cash and checks from customers
- ii) "Negotiating" special prices for a friend without permission
- iii) Accepting gifts from suppliers and business associates
- iv) Selling damaged merchandise
- v) Warranties on products
- vi) Merchandise return policies for customers
- vii) Returning merchandise to suppliers
- viii) Handling shoplifters
- ix) Accounting procedures for cash sales
- x) Employee theft
- xi) Insurance coverage adequate to protect the business and employees
- xii) Supporting the advertising promises
- xiii) Checking in merchandise when received from suppliers
- xiv) Keeping the premises clean and free from harmful substances or germs.
- xv) Handling employee performance problems
- xvi) Telling customers the truth
