PENERANGAN/INFORMATION :

1. Meticulous Work Performance

1.1 Meticulous by definition is showing of great attention to detail; very careful and precise in any activity. Meticulous work performance is basically a precise system of different processes that combine to create an effective workforce within your company that can effectively reach your business goals. There are many different aspects of performance management, but in most cases it can be broken down into a few simple steps. If you're adopting a performance management process for the first time or want to modify your current one to maximize its effectiveness, there are three key aspects that are the most important in your performance management system :

1.2 Planning – The first step in any good performance management process is likely also the most important. Haphazardly stumbling towards goals will usually only ends in disaster, so it's important that proper planning is used during performance management. This applies not only to the performance management system itself, but also to the inner workings of the business. Speaking strictly about performance management, good planning begins by analyzing the exact goals you want your company to attain and to develop realistic ways to achieve them. It's vital that your goals be realistic, otherwise your performance management plan will fail. It's also important to take the time to create a real plan that can achieve your goals.

1.3 Monitoring – If any performance management system is to succeed it needs to involve a very rigorous monitoring process. Closely surveying your overall company, each department, and individuals is vital for performance management and for you to reach your goals. Monitoring during performance management involves not just monitoring the progress of each department and employee but also providing them with constant feedback whether it is in the form of praise and reward or in constructive criticism. If you want your performance management efforts to succeed you'll have to monitor each step towards your goal very closely to ensure everything is going according to plan. If areas seem to be lacking, you'll need to be able to take steps to improve them such as providing training.

1.4 Rewards – While some experts place this lower in importance than other aspects of performance management, the truth is that your employees deserve rewards and that few things will influence not only the success of your performance management efforts but also the success of your entire company quite like appropriate rewards. Whether it is simple public recognition or actual monetary rewards, no performance management process will be complete or effective without good use of rewards. They can improve morale and employee satisfaction, boost productivity, and help you move closer to your goals. If you want your performance management to be successful, take the time to utilize rewards.

2. Consequences Of Alternative Solutions To Meticulous Performance

Any alternative solutions to meticulous performance would not bring any harm to the organizations unless it is on the opposite action, such as careless behaviour. Careless behavior means is not caring about other people's feelings or guidance, and also not caring about rules. It will damage the image of the organization and will cause a lot of negative impacts.

3. Constructive Performance Feedback

3.1 Feedback is an essential element for everyone in an organization's workforce. Giving feedback is a task you perform again and again as a manager or supervisor, letting people know where they are and where to go next in terms of expectations and goals - yours, their own, and the organizations.

3.2 Feedback is a useful tool for indicating when things are going in the right direction or for redirecting problem performance. Your objective in giving feedback is to provide guidance by supplying information in a useful manner, either to support effective behavior, or to guide someone back on track toward successful performance.

3.3 Some situations which require giving constructive feedback include:

- i) Ongoing performance discussions
- ii) Providing specific performance pointers
- iii) Following up on coaching discussions
- iv) Giving corrective guidance
- v) Letting someone know the consequences of their behavior

3.4 Some clues that constructive feedback is needed are when:

- i) Someone asks for your opinion about how they are doing
- ii) Unresolved problems persist
- iii) Errors occur again and again
- iv) An employee's performance doesn't meet expectations
- vi) A peer's work habits disturb you

4. Six Ways To Make Feedback Constructive

4.1 Part of being an effective manager or supervisor is knowing what feedback to give. The trick is learning how to give it constructively so that it has some value. Constructive feedback is a tool that is used to build things up, not break things down. It lets the other person know that you are on their side:

- i) If you can't think of a constructive purpose for giving feedback, don't give it at all.
- ii) Focus on description rather than judgement.
 - a) Describing behavior is a way of reporting what has occurred, while judging behavior is an evaluation of what has occurred in terms of "right or wrong", or "good or bad". By avoiding evaluative language, you reduce the need for the individual to respond defensively. For example: "You demonstrate a high degree of confidence when you answer customer questions about registration procedures, "rather than, "Your communication skills are good."
- iii) Focus on observation rather than inference.
 - a) Observations refer to what you can see or hear about an individual's behavior, while inferences refer to the assumptions and interpretations you make from what you see or hear. Focus on what the person did and your reaction.

---------------------------	----------------------------------	--

b) For example: "When you gave that student the Financial Aid form, you tossed it across the counter," rather than describe what you assume to be the person's motivation, "I suppose you give all forms out that way!"

iv) Focus on behavior rather than the person

a) Refer to what an individual does rather than on what you imagine she or he is. To focus on behavior, use adverbs, which describe action, rather than adjectives, which describe qualities.

b) For example: "You talked considerably during the staff meeting, which prevented me from getting to some of the main points," rather than "You talk too much."

v) Provide a balance of positive and negative feedback

a) If you consistently give only positive or negative feedback, people will distrust the feedback and it will become useless.

vi) Be aware of feedback overload.

a) Select two or three important points you want to make and offer feedback about those points. If you overload an individual with feedback, she or he may become confused about what needs to be improved or changed.

b) For example: "The number of applicants and the time it takes you to enter them are both within the expected ranges. The number of keying errors you are currently making is higher than expected."

4.2 Giving feedback constructively benefits everyone. You, as the manager or supervisor, use the ongoing exchange of information as a way of getting to know your people and providing them with valuable guidance in their work. The employee, manager, supervisor, or peer receives data that makes that makes her or his job go easier. The organization gains in improved productivity of its workforce.
