---------------------------	--------------------------------	---

The person is then able to resolve conflicts, build harmony and bridge communication gaps, which created conflict.

2.2 : Helps in achieving goals.

Effective communication helps a person to get what they expects out of life. This makes they capable of communicating thoughts in such a way that people understand instantly. Thus, they offer you the resources, which are you require to achieve your dreams and goals.

2.3 : Strengthens relationships.

Effective communication helps people understand what they want and expect from each other. This helps to build strong personal relationships between them.

2.4 : Better acceptance of ideas.

Effective communication is very broad concept and helps to discover the wants and needs of others. You can thus adjust your presentation in order to match their needs. Gradually people know that you try to understand them rather than making them understand your needs they will gladly adopt your ideas.

2.5 : Improves job satisfaction

Efficient communication among employees helps to improve job satisfaction. All employees feel that their presence makes difference to the organization. Bosses feel that their orders and requests are being cared for.

2.6 : Helps to save time.

With an increase in competition in every field of life time has become a crucial factor. Thus a choice of communication channel such as phone, fax, email and face to face for transferring information can help in saving a lot of time and money.

2.7 : Easy promotions.

Effective communicators have greater chances of being promoted in their jobs.

3. Barriers To Effective Communication

3.1 : Ineffective communication can always occur and lead to communication breakdown as both parties fail to deliver or process the received message. Without constant sending and feedback in communication, the parties will not be able to understand and respond appropriately to the idea of the others and thus, cannot co-operate.

Without good communication, there will be no teamwork in the workplace and there sure to be misunderstandings and conflict.

3.2 Ineffective communication is seen as a problems cause by 'barriers'. Those barriers includes:

i) Physical distraction.

The elements of the surrounding such as poor lighting, background noises and atmosphere can really drive off your focus span during communication.

ii) Attitude

If you feel strong emotions like angered or unhappy, you will most likely feel uncomfortable to listen or even speak with someone. This will not only halt the effectiveness of your communication but also make you less productive and co-operative. Emotions can also interfere with your confidence in facing others and thus, make you less of a dependable person in other's eyes.

iii) Channel barriers

Sometime. if you are trying to send instruction to someone, it would be more ideal to have it in written form rather than telling them verbally, or else it would be difficult to follow through. People who are unaware of how they should communicate could get in a lot of problem.

iv) Stereotype

When you have stereotypical thoughts about someone base on their background and culture, it would be hard for you to communicate effectively as you won't have enough trust in them. Holding stereotypical thoughts about someone else who simply put a barrier between you and them.

v) Language barrier

In communication, language barriers can happen anytime. Everyone have their own mother tongue language as well as their own interpretation of certain words and phrases. Thus, conflicting language might occur and the communicators might not be able to understand each other.

vi) Time barrier

Choosing when to approach a person to discuss something with them is very important because if you do not choose the appropriate time, the person whom you are trying to deliver the message to might not be interested in listening to you.

vii) Structural problems in the organization

If the structure in an organization is unclear, then members of the organization might have problems communicating as they don't know who and when to communicate. New members should be instructed clearly to prevent any communication mishap or confusion.

viii) Lack of knowledge on the subjects

Lack of understanding on the subject would make communication difficult for both the sender and the receiver. Usually, people communicate easier when the subject of matter is something that both of them are familiar with. If the sender is not sure about the matter he is communicating, then the receiver would be troubled in understanding as well.

ix) Information overload

Processing information takes time and if communication does not go at a pace where both parties can have enough time to carry out their thought process, then it will cause communication breakdown as concentration and interest might be halted.

x. Assumptions

Assuming something without clarification is a very dangerous thing to do. When you assume the wrong information, it is very likely that you will make wrong decisions and conclusion. This could cause many extended problems and lead to conflicts as well.

3.3 : Communication barriers can be avoided if you know how to deal with them correctly.

Here are some advice to overcome these problems:-

- i) Be attentive of who you are communicating with. If they have trouble getting your message, you should know how to adjust your communication method in order to get through with them.
- ii) Be patience is the key to effective communication. You must never rush anything and take your time in order to make communication work.
- iii) Never assume because you could interpretative the foul information and carry out wrong decisions or responds. Always clarify something if you are unclear.
- iv) Be friendly and open-minded towards others you are co-operating with. You must never judge others or let your feelings towards someone interfere with your work. Also, you must be emphatic towards other to work out the problem rather than just let things be. Workplace often encourage those who co-operate well with others no matter what.
- v) Be aware of who you are communicating with and how you should communicate with them. This would help you approach that person and approach in a better manner and style and prevent and problems that might occur.

4. Skill for Effective Communication

4.1 Following are the main skills one should have to master to become an effective communicator.

i) Staying focused on topic

When you deal with an argument, most of the times, the discussion goes out of topic and the situation can become quite complicated. Staying focused is one of the best skills for communicating under pressure. If you go out of focus, there is a high chance that the end result of the communication may not be effective.

ii) Listening Carefully

Listening well means understanding the information and the emotion being communicated. When you really listen, you're engaged with what's being said, you'll hear the subtle intonations in someone's voice that tell you how that person is feeling and the emotions they're trying to communicate.

iii) Pay Attention to nonverbal signals (body language)

When we communicate, we mainly using nonverbal signals such facial expressions, body movement and gestures, eye contact, posture, the tone of voice and breathing. The way you look, listen, move, and react to another person tells them more about how you're feeling. Developing the ability to understand and use nonverbal communication can help you connect with others, express what you really mean, navigate challenging situations, and build better relationships at home and work.

iv) Understanding Others' Point of Views

If you can really see through their point of view, you can actually explain yours in a clear and applicable way.

v) Empathy When Criticizing

Sometimes, we become really defensive when someone criticizes us. In communication, it is really important to listen to the other person's pain and difficulties and respond with empathy. At the same time, try to extract the facts and the truth in what they say.

vi) Assert yourself

Being assertive means expressing your thoughts, feelings, and needs in an open and honest way, while standing up for yourself and respecting others. Assertive expression makes for clear communication and can help boost self-esteem and decision-making.

vii) Compromise if Necessary

Communication is not about winning, it's about getting things done. So you may have to compromise in the process.

viii) Take a Time-Out if Necessary

To communicate effectively, you need to learn how to manage stress. When you're stressed, you're more likely to misread other people, send confusing or off-putting nonverbal signals. If you can quickly relieve stress and return to a calm state, you'll also help to calm the other person. So take a break in the middle of the discussion if ineffective communication pattern surfaced. After the break, all the parties involved in the discussion will be able to constructively contribute for the discussion.

ix) Compete for Your Objective

Although there can be a lot of obstacles, do not give up what you are fighting for. Surely you may have to compromise, but clearly stand for what you believe in.
