ANSWER SCHEME

Question 1

a. Specify four (4) benefits of effective communication in workplace:

2.1 Reduces conflict.

The primary reason for the occurrence of conflict is misunderstood communication.

Learning effective communication skills helps a person to be an effective communicator. The person is then able to resolve conflicts, build harmony and bridge communication gaps, which created conflict.

2.2 : Helps in achieving goals.

Effective communication helps a person to get what they expect out of life. This makes them capable of communicating thoughts in such a way that people understand instantly. Thus, they offer you the resources, which are you require to achieve your dreams and goals.

2.3 : Strengthens relationships.

Effective communication helps people understand what they want and expect from each other. This helps to build strong personal relationships between them.

2.4 : Better acceptance of ideas.

Effective communication is very broad concept and helps to discover the wants and needs of others. You can thus adjust your presentation in order to match their needs.

Gradually people know that you try to understand them rather than making them understand your needs they will gladly adopt your ideas.

2.5 : Improves job satisfaction

Efficient communication among employees helps to improve job satisfaction. All employees feel that their presence makes difference to the organization. Bosses feel that their orders and requests are being cared for.

2.6 : Helps to save time.

With an increase in competition in every field of life time has become a crucial factor.

Thus a choice of communication channel such as phone, fax, email and face to face for transferring information can help in saving a lot of time and money.

2.7 : Easy promotions.

Effective communicators have greater chances of being promoted in their jobs.

ix) Information overload x.) Assumptions

c. Define the meaning and purpose of graphic information. (4 Marks)

Answer

a. Information graphics or info graphics are graphic visual representations of information, data or knowledge intended to present information quickly and clearly. They can improve cognition by utilizing graphics to enhance the human visual system's ability to see patterns and trends. Similar pursuits are information visualization, data visualization, statistical graphics, information design, or information architecture.

b. Info graphics have evolved in recent years to be for mass communication, and thus are designed with fewer assumptions about the reader's knowledge base than other types of visualizations. Isotopes' are an early example of info graphics conveying information quickly and easily to the masses.

- e. Distinguish between symbol and sign. (3 Marks)

Symbols:

Something that represents or suggests something else. Symbols often take the form of words, visual images, or gestures that are used to convey ideas and beliefs. All human cultures use symbols to express the underlying structure of their social systems, to represent ideal cultural characteristics, such as beauty, and to ensure that the culture is passed on to new generations. Symbolic relationships are learned rather than biologically or naturally determined, and each culture has its own symbols.

Signs:

Something that indicates or acts as a token of a fact, condition or an action or gesture intended to convey information or a command.

Soalan 2

Elaborate the key aspects involved in delivering effective presentation or in decision making on presentation method. (10 Marks)

Answer

- i) The facilities available to you by way of visual aids, sound systems, and lights.

Obviously you cannot use facilities that are not available. If you are told that you will need to present without a projector, you're going to need to decide on a method that works without slides.

- ii) The occasion.

A formal conference of 200 people will require a very different approach from a presentation to your six-person team. And a speech at a personnel function is totally different again. Consider the norms of the occasion. For example, at a certain function, you are not expected to use slides or other visual aids.

- iii) The audience and the topic.

If it's a small, informal event, you will be able to use a less formal method. You might, for example, choose to give your audience a one-page handout, perhaps info graphic that summarizes your key points, and talk them through it. A more formal event is likely to need slides.

iv) Your experience in giving presentations.

More experienced presenters will be more familiar with their own weak points, and able to tailor their preparation and style to suit. However, few people are able to give a presentation without notes. Even the most experienced speakers will usually have at least some form of notes to jog their memory and aid their presentation.

v) Your familiarity with the topic.

As a general rule, the more you know about it, the less you will need to prepare in detail, and the more you can simply have an outline of what you want to say, with some brief reminders.

vi) Your personal preferences.

Some people prefer to 'bask it' (or 'wing it') and make up their presentation on the day, while others prefer detailed notes and outlines. You will need to know your own abilities and decide how best to make the presentation. When you first start giving presentations you may feel more confident with more detailed notes. As you become more experienced you may find that you can deliver effectively with less.

b. Discuss the main skills one should have to master to become an effective communicator (10 Marks).

Answer

i) Staying focused on topic

When you deal with an argument, most of the times, the discussion goes out of topic and the situation can become quite complicated. Staying focused is one of the best skills for communicating under pressure. If you go out of focus, there is a high chance that the end result of the communication may not be effective.

ii) Listening Carefully

Listening well means understanding the information and the emotion being communicated. When you really listen, you're engaged with what's being said, you'll hear the subtle intonations in someone's voice that tell you how that person is feeling and the emotions they're trying to communicate.

iii) Pay Attention to nonverbal signals (body language)

When we communicate, we mainly using nonverbal signals such facial expressions, body movement and gestures, eye contact, posture, the tone of voice and breathing. The way you look, listen, move, and react to another person tells them more about how you're feeling. Developing the ability to understand and use nonverbal communication can help you connect with others, express what you really mean, navigate challenging situations, and build better relationships at home and work.

iv) Understanding Others' Point of Views

If you can really see through their point of view, you can actually explain yours in a clear and applicable way.

v) Empathy When Criticizing

Sometimes, we become really defensive when someone criticizes us. In communication, it is really important to listen to the other person's pain and difficulties and respond with empathy. At the same time, try to extract the facts and the truth in what they say.

vi) Assert yourself

Being assertive means expressing your thoughts, feelings, and needs in an open and honest way, while standing up for yourself and respecting others. Assertive expression makes for clear communication and can help boost self-esteem and decision-making.

vii) Compromise if Necessary

Communication is not about winning, it's about getting things done. So you may have to compromise in the process.

viii) Take a Time-Out if Necessary

To communicate effectively, you need to learn how to manage stress. When you're stressed, you're more likely to misread other people, send confusing or off-putting nonverbal signals. If you can quickly relieve stress and return to a calm state, you'll also help to calm the other person. So take a break in the middle of the discussion if ineffective communication pattern surfaced. After the break, all the parties involved in the discussion will be able to constructively contribute for the discussion.

ix) Compete for Your Objective

Although there can be a lot of obstacles, do not give up what you are fighting for. Surely you may have to compromise, but clearly stand for what you believe in.
