TAJUK/TITLE : ORGANISATION BRANDING

TUJUAN/PURPOSE :

This information sheet is to describes the requirement to maintain and ensure the effectiveness of change management in the organization that include organisation branding.

PENERANGAN/INFORMATION :

1. Organisation

- 1.1 An organisation is an entity comprising multiple people such as an institution or an association that has a collective goal.
- 1.2 It is widely recognized that different organisations have distinctive cultures.
- 1.3 A commonly used definition of organisational culture is “the way we see and do things around here”.
- 1.4 Through tradition, history and structure, organisations build up their own culture.
- 1.5 Culture therefore gives an organisation a sense of identity – “who we are”, “what we stand for” and “what we do”. It determines through the organisation’s legends, rituals, beliefs, meanings, values, norms and language, the way in which “things are done around here”.

2. Branding

2.1 Branding is a marketing strategy that involves creating a differentiated name and image, often using a logo and / or tag line in order to establish a presence in the consumer's mind and attract and keep customers.

2.2 Branding should both precede and underlie any marketing effort. Branding is not push but pull. Branding is the expression of the essential truth or value of an organization, product or service.

2.3 It is communication of characteristics, values and attributes that clarify what this particular brand is and is not.

2.4 A brand will help encourage someone to buy a product and it directly supports whatever sales or marketing activities are in play, but the brand does not explicit say “buy me”.

2.5 Instead it says “This is what I am. This is why I exist. If you agree, if you like me, you can buy me, support me and recommend me to your friends”

2.6 The brand is what remains after the marketing has swept through the room.

2.7 It is what sticks in your mind associated with a product, service or organization – whether or not, at that particular moments you bought or did not buy.

2.8 The brand is ultimately what determines if you will become a loyal customer or not. The marketing may convince you to buy a particular Toyota, and maybe it is the first foreign car you ever owned, but it is the brand that will determine if you will only buy Toyotas for the rest of your life.

2.9 The brand is built from many things. Very important among these things is the lived experience of the brand.

2.10 Did that car deliver on its brand promise or reliability? Did the maker continue to uphold the quality standards that made them what they are? Did the sales guy or the service center mechanic know what they were talking about?

3. Culture

3.1 Over time the organization will develop “norms” ie. established expected behavior patterns within the organization. A norm is an established behavior pattern that is part of a culture.

3.2 At the base of the identity of an organization is its organizational culture. A culture is comprised of the shared values, customs, traditions, rituals, behaviors and beliefs shared by a social group.

3.3 Cultures also share languages or ways of speaking.

3.4 From a communication perspective, cultures are made and remade through the words we use to describe our world.

3.5 Culture change with the times but the speed at which the culture of different institutions changes varies widely.

3.6 Organisational culture plays several important roles ie.

- i) culture unites employees by providing a sense of identity with the organization.
- ii) culture enables organisations to differentiate themselves from one another.
- iii) Culture often generates commitment, superceding personal interests.
- iv) Culture sets organization norms, rules and standards. Thereby, culture enables employees to function in an organization by teaching them how to behave.
- v) Culture becomes especially important in a program / project based organisations. In such an organization, the hierarchy is flat and decision-making moved to the project / programme purpose units and departments. In this context, culture provides the guiding light towards achievement of goals and objectives.

4. Organisational Culture Multiplicities

4.1 Organisations develop their own culture. The culture of organization consists of elements that are valued and practiced in a large variety.

Picture 4.1 : Example of multiplicity

4.2 The emerging challenges for communicating and organizing in a global / local operational environment are based on understanding the interrelationships among cultural differences, communication behaviors and organizational relationships both within and outside of the organization.

4.3 The challenge for a supervisor is to see the current culture and style of communication within an organization and to develop communication skills that will allow for the insight, sensitivity, vision, versatility, focus, patience and global-localism called for in today's complex work environment.

4.4 Effective language and clear visual presentation related to culture multiplicities in the organization can help to boost the organization branding.

5. Ideas of Branding

5.1 Branding is one of the most important aspects of any business. An effective brand strategy gives you a major edge in increasingly competitive markets.

5.2 Your brand is your promise to your customer. It tells them what they can expect from your products and services, and it differentiates your offering from your competitions'.

|---------------------------|--------------------------------|---------------------------------------|

- 5.3 Your brand is derived from who you are, who you want to be and who people perceive you to be.
- 5.4 Normally consumers have more than one need, and analyzing the multiplicity of needs provides insight for marketers.
- 5.5 The concept of attitudes will lead us to several interesting and useful insights about consumers because the concept deals with both internal aspects of consumer mindset and the intention to buy products and brands.
- 5.6 Attitudes serve as quick reference points to consumer behavior. In the case of a new-concept products, consumers develop an attitude towards the product category.
- 5.7 When they accept the product category, they develop an attitude towards the specific brands that can be measured by appropriate marketing research techniques.
- 5.8 There is a strong link between beliefs, attitudes and values of consumers.
- 5.9 Time tested tips on branding are
- i. get a great logo
  - ii. write down our brand messaging
  - iii. integrate our brand
  - iv. create a “voice” for our company that reflects our brand
  - v. develop a tagline
  - vi. design templates and create brand standards for your marketing materials
  - vii. be true to your brand
  - viii. be consistent
- 5.10 Do your research. Learn the needs, habits and desires of your current and prospective customers. Don’t rely on what you think they think. Know what they think.
